Jasper Leadbeater

Jasper is a self-taught British artist whose practise reframes objects associated with force, transforming them into cultural iconography. Originally from London and now based in Wiltshire, Jasper left university to pursue art full-time. Now over a decade later, what began as early experimentation has evolved into a patented design, distinctly his own.

Working with reclaimed shotgun shells, Jasper reconstructs the discarded material into sustainable artworks that challenge perceptions of waste and value. His dedication to craftsmanship and fine detail ensures every component is carefully considered, hand drawing and hand cutting every stencil that he uses. The art has been exhibited across the UK and internationally, and now hangs in private collections and homes around the world.
